Presentation Title and Synopsis:

Lessons from Investing Masters

Since January has brought declining markets and fresh wrinkles to investor brows, it's time to remind ourselves that tough times are not a new phenomenon and challenging days shall also pass.

There are present Masters of investing whose recorded words can impart wisdom and direction to us today. You likely know names like Louis Rukeyser, Warren Buffett and P. T. Barnum [not just a master marketer but also a life coach!]. But there are also past Masters you may never have heard of... such as Claude Rosenberg Jr., Peter L. Bernstein, Nigel Lawson, and Charles D. Ellis.

For the February meeting, I am assembling a packet of short readings from present and past Masters. This packet will be e-mailed in advance to members who reserve a seat. That will give everyone the opportunity to study the gurus' ideas beforehand so when we come together we'll can focus on the merits and the fruitility of 20th century Masters to our 21st Century investing milieu.

The SEC insists that everyone in the financial industry display the legend: "past performance is no guarantee of future results." But this doesn't preclude us from claiming: "past ideas can produce future benefit."
